Envisioning The Faculty For The Twenty-First Century: Moving To A Mission-Oriented And Learner-Centered Model (The American Campus)

Synopsis

The institution of tenureâonce a cornerstone of American colleges and universitiesâis rapidly eroding. Today, the majority of faculty positions are part-time or limited-term appointments, a radical change that has resulted more from circumstance than from thoughtful planning. As colleges and universities evolve to meet the changing demands of society, how might their leaders design viable alternative faculty models for the future?ÂÂEnvisioning the Faculty for the Twenty-First Century weighs the concerns of university administrators, professors, adjuncts, and students in order to critically assess emerging faculty models and offer informed policy recommendations. Cognizant of the financial pressures that have led many universities to favor short-term faculty contracts, higher education experts Adrianna Kezar and Daniel Maxey assemble a top-notch roster of contributors to Âinvestigate whether there are ways to modify the existing system or promote new faculty models. They suggest how colleges and universities might rethink their procedures for faculty development, hiring, scheduling, and evaluation in order to maintain a campus environment that still fosters faculty service and student-centered learning.ÂÂEven as it asks urgent questions about how to retain the best elements of American higher education, Envisioning the Faculty for the Twenty-First Century also examines the opportunities that systemic changes might create. Ultimately, it provides some starting points for how colleges and universities might best respond to the rapidly evolving needs of an increasingly global society. ÂÂ

Customer Reviews

"Envisioning the Faculty for the Twenty-First Century doesn't just offer criticism. It also seeks to establish common ground among faculty members, administrators and even students and accreditors, and explores possible solutions." (Inside Higher Ed)"To promote the health of your educational programs and faculty, start here - with evidence and practice-based knowledge on the working lives and impacts of the many kinds of instructors who educate our students, advance knowledge, and sustain our institutions." (Lisa Lattuca professor, Center for the Study of Higher and Postsecondary Education, University of Michigan)â œFueled by a breathtaking range of voices for reimagining faculty roles and responsibilities, this book stimulates long overdue public discourse on the professoriate in the rapidly changing landscape of higher education.â • (Clifton Conrad Vilas Distinguished Professor at the University of Wisconsin-Madison)

ADRIANNA KEZAR is a professor for higher education at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, and co-director of the Pullias Center for Higher Education.
