I'm not even finished with this book, but I had to comment. There are so many positive reviews here (and a few negative), that I felt compelled to add my two cents. To the detractors: while it is normal to be skeptical of these teachings, please bear in mind that as in life, you should take what works for you and disregard the rest. Just because something doesn't ring true to your soul, doesn't mean it can't benefit someone else. Conversely, just because something resonates with you, doesn't mean it will resonate with someone else. I am only on the chapter in this book which addresses Soul Language Translation, and I have to say that so far it has proved to be an amazing experience for me. I have spoken Soul Language on a number of occasions, and that in itself was truly incredible. No, I don't know what I am saying (I hope to learn how to interpret that, eventually), but just the act of speaking in a language I've never heard of and in such a fluent manner was mind-boggling. The "words" just flew out of my mouth; I had no control over them. I can tell you that the very first time I spoke Soul Language, it felt as though my Soul was absolutely elated at this opportunity. I felt such joy and bliss during this action that I found myself laughing with glee. Just two days ago, I used Soul Language to try and heal myself. I've been having a persistent pain/ache in my shoulder for weeks now due to overdoing weight exercises. I used the blessing in the book and specified what I needed/wanted to heal, and then spoke Soul Language. Again, I have no clue, as yet, of what I was saying; I can only tell you that shortly thereafter the pain I was feeling was significantly diminished. I cannot explain how or why. Coincidence? Who knows? All I know is that prior to my actions, the pain was nearly unbearable. Now, I hardly experience symptoms at all. As for naysayers who dispute Dr. Sha's charging $97.00 for "ankle downloads", etc. I don't buy into that, anyway. If it speaks to your soul to make such a "purchase", go right ahead..otherwise, as I said earlier, disregard whatever doesn't ring true to you, and instead, focus on what resonates with your soul. I also don't buy into the idea that one has to chant for two hours every day for six months or so to be healed of their afflictions. To me, the spiritual world does not put a price or time frame on their ability or willingness to heal. I will say, however, that I believe in order for us to heal ourselves (vs. looking exclusively to the spiritual realm), we must do some work, too. Healthy eating, exercise and daily meditation can go a long way towards that goal. Also, I'm sure that the chanting ritual to open up your "message center" (heart chakra) doesn't hurt. I know that whenever I chant (and it DOESN'T have to be extremely fast at all for me to speak Soul Language or go on "forever"), my cats go "nuts" with affection towards me. I truly believe there is something to this particular mantra and that, even if at times I don't get to speak Soul Language during every attempt, that it is benefiting me in some way. Lastly, as for Dr. Sha's wearing glasses in spite of his allegations that one can heal themselves through his teachings, has it ever occurred to anyone that maybe some things are not meant to be healed and that a particular affliction may prove to be a lesson in itself? I know, I know. I HATE that idea as much as anyone else. I would love to be able to heal myself of my very poor vision, too (in addition to a host of other things). However, I know that even if I never do, Dr. Sha's book is benefiting me in other ways. Just apart from the experience of speaking Soul Language (a beautiful gift in and of itself), my meditations are deep during chanting, I feel more connected to the Universe and I know deep in my heart that as difficult as life may be, getting in touch with my spirituality is the key to dealing with it all. I am not talking religion here. I am talking about how important it is to remind ourselves daily that we are spiritual beings having a human experience. If this book serves to remind you of that alone, it is far worth the price of the eight to ten dollars you pay for it, even if it does nothing else for you.
