If you have a car and are driving through Tuscany GET THIS MAP! The other maps cannot touch it. It has all the towns and roads. I had 3 maps of the area and we eventually ended up with the other two on the floor, and then later on, in the back seat. I didn't want to buy this one because I thought it would be a mess of folded papers and ripped edge like the maps of old - not so! It folded easily and neatly every time and I could bend it over on itself to focus just on the area we were traveling in. It is a huge map if it is all opened up. GPS and googlemaps worked great for us while we were there but you need a map to figure out where you are and this is really the one. Don't be afraid to trust the map and enjoy the back roads, it is the best part of Tuscany!

I think the Michelin maps have overall the best detail for driving in Europe. They list lots of routes by number, and they include many small villages and towns that help in navigating back roads. If I could change one thing about this map it would be to use black lettering for all city/town names, to make them easier to read on the road especially in poor lighting conditions. Michelin apparently doesn't sell larger scale maps for Tuscany, but if this becomes a problem many of the local tourist information offices have good road maps of nearby regions. An advantage of the Michelin maps is that they are coordinated with the Michelin Red Guides and Green Guides, for those of us who still like to have books rather than rely on the Internet and smart phones for all travel planning.

If you are driving in Tuscany, this is the map that you need. It contains all the details you could ever want. As it says on the cover, its based on satellite imagery, and contains a lot of physical detail such as the location of areas containing buildings which would be absent without this feature. A really great map, and I'm packing it on my next trip to Tuscany. After my visit to Tuscany, I can say this map really does the job. What I can suggest is that you also purchase some of the 1:25,000 maps which are available in the Tuscan bookshops which shows exact walking and driving information that you will need if you are driving or walking this country. Love this map.

Will be renting a car as we visit Tuscany. This map is large (as reported by others) and detailed. It has been helpful for planning. We will see how helpful it is once we are on the road. But we are renting a car and some other references point out that the GPS maps aren't always accurate, so this should be a good 'backup' for the navigator.

Michelin maps are Old School, of course. It's a printed map, right? But they do the job very well. We're going with a group in November and I posted the map on my wall to highlight places we should see. It's working great!!!!

There is a reason that the Michelin maps are considered the "gold standard", detail and accuracy. This map provides both. It could use more city-level detail maps for secondary cities like Livorno, but it is a great assist for anyone attempting to drive in Italy.

Very good, clear, detailed map. Yes, it's quite large as many have noted but that is why you can actually fold it... open it only partially to use in the car and you should be just fine.

Excellent thorough map of Tuscany but it is massive.
